

Resource

Practical help

People with RA can need practical help with everyday activities. This can be through aids or gadgets, items already available or through finding new ways to do an activity. One of the major areas where practical help is needed is with computers and other electronic devices.

Print

Many people with RA will struggle with everyday tasks and will be forced to find new ways to be able to do them, whether it's through buying an aid or gadget, using items already available to them or altering the way that they do an activity. Sharing ideas for how to do these everyday tasks can help to give someone with RA greater independence.

One of the major areas where practical help is crucial in the modern day is with the computer.

Whether using electronic devices for personal use or in the workplace, most people will need to access apps, software and the internet and this can be difficult in a condition where the hands are one of the areas most commonly affected. Thankfully, there is now a lot of help available in hardware, such as ergonomic keyboards and wrist supports and software, such as voice command software, which can help to minimise the amount of typing someone has to do.

Recommended publications

The following four publications are a great way to start your self-management journey. They are all

Publication

Publication

Fatigue Matters

Publication

Medicines in Rheumatoid Arthritis

Publication

Blood Matters

Further reading

For the following articles:

Article

Useful tips

There are many products available to help people with rheumatoid arthritis to go about normal day-to-

ain on joints. We asked some of our Members to talk about \(de\) and other innovations that they had found helpful.

Article

Rheumatoid arthritis & computing

Many people with RA find it painful to use a standard keyboard and mouse so we have teamed up with AbilityNet to produce a factsheet that describes the steps and some of the options that can help make computers, laptops, tablets and smartphones easier to use.

This article was downloaded from www.nras.org.uk. National Rheumatoid Arthritis Society (NRAS) is a registered charity in England and Wales (1134859) and Scotland (SC039721). A private company limited by guarantee. Registered in England and Wales (7127101).