

Resource

General medicine information

People diagnosed with RA will often be on multiple medications. In addition to disease control, there may be medications for symptom control or other health conditions. You may also need general information about how to report side effects or which vaccinations you can have.

Print

As well as the medications prescribed by your rheumatologist to manage your RA and its symptoms, you may also be on medications for related complications. You may be given specific guidance on immunisations and vaccines.

If you live in England and are not eligible for free prescriptions, the number of medications being prescribed to you could be expensive for you to pay for on a regular basis. There are options for payment of prescription charges including obtaining help with health costs which could be helpful. Please see our related Article:

Article on Prescription Charges

Medicines in rheumatoid arthritis

We believe it is essential that people living with RA understand why certain medicines are used, when they are used and how they work to manage the condition.

Order/Download

Image not found or type unknown

Article

Immunisation for people with rheumatoid arthritis

People living with RA need to take care to protect themselves against infections. The risk of infections, including common colds, but also serious infections such as flu or pneumonia, can be increased in RA. The immune system, reducing the ability to effectively clear infections

Article

Live vaccines

As many with RA are unable to have live vaccines due to the medications they take, we have looked into the contact with live vaccines, whether directly or through contact with

Article

Keep taking the pills

Adherence is often easier said than done. In broadest terms it is defined as “the extent to which a patient’s behavior it relates to taking medication, following a diet, or adopting lifestyle changes that require psychological stamina.

Article

Photosensitivity

Photosensitivity causes a reaction to sunlight and can be caused by health conditions and medications. RA is not, by itself, a condition that would make you more sensitive to the sun, but a number of medications are considered photosensitive.

Article

Reporting side effects

The Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Authority (MHRA) has launched an app for patients and healthcare professionals to report the side effects of medicines via the Yellow Card Scheme. Side effects can also be reported through the scheme online or by phone.

Article

Prescription charges

Prescription medications are free for patients in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. In England, however, there is currently a charge per item which many people may have to pay if they are not eligible for free prescriptions. There are options for spreading the cost through a pre-paid prescription account with health care costs.

Article

Remission

Unlike some other conditions, remission in RA does not mean that your disease has completely gone. It is more like a dormant volcano, able to erupt again, but currently stable.

This article was downloaded from www.nras.org.uk. National Rheumatoid Arthritis Society (NRAS) is a registered charity in England and Wales (1134859) and Scotland (SC039721). A private company limited by guarantee. Registered in England and Wales (7127101).