A step by step guide

1. Get a copy of the Will and check it is valid

Most people keep a copy of their Will at home or with their solicitors. It is important to check the Will you have is the most recent version. A solicitor will be able to advise if the Will is valid.

2. Collect details of your loved one's assets and any debts

As the lay executor, you will need to gather the details of your loved one's estate, including accurate valuations of all assets and any outstanding debts. This is sometimes referred to as a schedule of assets and liabilities. You will need this information when applying for the Grant of Probate (England, Wales and Northern Ireland) or Confirmation (Scotland).

3. Apply for a Grant of Probate

Getting a Grant of Probate (or Confirmation if the deceased lived in Scotland) allows you to legally deal with the deceased's estate. In most cases you'll need to do this before you can access their bank account, mortgage and any investments.

To get a Grant of Probate you need to:

- Complete a probate application form, this will be different depending on where the deceased lived. If the deceased lived in England, Wales or Northern Ireland, please see here. If the deceased lived in Scotland please see here.
- Complete the appropriate Inheritance Tax form, see here.
- Send your application to your local Probate Registry office, see here. Check what you should include with your application on here.
- Swear an oath, you must do this before a solicitor or at the local probate office. Your local probate office will help you arrange this appointment.

Once you have submitted your application to the Probate Registry, it should take between three to four weeks to receive a Grant of Probate. However, at the moment, the Probate Registry is experiencing delays.

4. Pay inheritance tax (if applicable)

Inheritance tax is payable on all estates worth over a certain amount. it's important to check if the deceased's estate qualifies, see here.

All estates have to submit the appropriate inheritance tax form, even if there is no inheritance tax to pay, see here. As the National Rheumatoid Arthritis Society (NRAS) is a charity, most gifts left to us are exempt from inheritance tax, but this is not the case in every scenario.

If more than 10% of the value of the estate has been left to charity, inheritance tax may be payable at a reduced rate. In this circumstance, see here for the appropriate form. This form should be submitted with your other inheritance tax paperwork when applying for a Grant of Probate. For further details of inheritance tax exemptions and conditions, see here.

5. Take control of all assets, settle any outstanding debts and distribute the estate in line with the Will – including gifts to the National Rheumatoid Arthritis Society (NRAS).

You are now ready to distribute the estate to the right people. After any debts, like mortgages or loans, have been paid off, you can distribute the gifts left in the Will to the beneficiaries.

How do I know if a gift is meant for the National Rheumatoid Arthritis Society (NRAS)?

A gift is likely to have been left to NRAS if it uses either of the following addresses and/or charity numbers.

Our charity has had one previous address and has also been registered under one previous charity number.
