Resource

CORE – UK Kings College London study

A study based on experiences of the pandemic, and how this can help future decisions within the medical community.

Print

Over the past few months the global spread of the COVID-19 pandemic has affected us all. The medical community has struggled to make decisions in the best interest of our community, whilst at the same time trying to learn about how the virus affects people, why it is as dangerous as it is, and what we can do to better deal with the infection.

To help make those decisions Kings College London is conducting this study and need information about your experience with the pandemic, and in particular, if you know you have had COVID-19 infection, about how it has affected you. In this way we will be better able to inform you and fellow patients about the risks the virus poses, and to better care for fellow patients if and when they become infected.

With this in mind, we would be tremendously grateful if you can complete an online, anonymous questionnaire, which NRAS supports, about your rheumatoid arthritis and how it affects you. The questionnaire will take 5-10 minutes to complete, and is part of a global research program to provide an evidence-base to help you and others living with RA.

Click here to access the survey

This article was downloaded from www.nras.org.uk. National Rheumatoid Arthritis Society (NRAS) is a registered charity in England and Wales (1134859) and Scotland (SC039721). A private company limited by guarantee. Registered in England and Wales (7127101).