NRAS Ambassadors campaign for better RA services in their communities in England, Scotland and Wales

Print

An opportunity to get directly involved in shaping RA policy for people living with RA who understand the condition well and would feel confident making the case for improvements in treatment and support to decision-makers in government and the NHS. There are Ambassador groups in three parts of the UK at present: in Greater Manchester, the Cardiff area, and Scotland (mainly centred around Edinburgh). Members of these NRAS Ambassador groups are committed to improving life for people living with RA in their communities. Ambassadors give up their valuable time to meet with policymakers, promote excellence in RA services, and participate in other campaigning activities to improve life for people living with RA.
